ALEGIICHAN

- Ensuring that there are good arrangements in place for consultation and communication within the workplace on health and safety matters (this is usually achieved by organising a safety committee);
- Ensuring that each area/sector of a site has representation at the safety committee meeting. Where a trade union is recognised on the site indicates a desire to appoint a representative under the provision of the Safety Representatives and Safety Committees Regulations 1977. The responsible manager should accept the appointment to the safety committee;
- Take minutes for every safety committee meeting and to promote the effective discussion of health and safety, the minutes of the previous meeting and the new agenda are displayed on notice boards well in advance of the meetings;
- Ensure that a competent person chairs the safety committee;
- Each safety committee meets at least once every six months;
- Oversee that a sufficient number and quality of subordinate Managers and Supervisors are appointed as permanent members of each safety committee;
- Wherever appropriate, invite specialist advisors such as health and safety advisors, Occupational Health Consultants, etc. to attend the committee;
- Ensure that contractors, temporary workers and visitors are made aware of health and safety risks.

5.0 Procedures
